

Contributor's Page

Roger Abrahams is Professor of English and Anthropology and Director of the African and Afro-American Research Institute at the University of Texas. He is presently a fellow of the National Humanities Institute of the University of Chicago.

Bob Blackman has done graduate work at Indiana University. He writes regularly for several folk music publications.

Charles Camp is presently Maryland's state folklorist and succeeded George Carey.

Hasan M. El-Shamy is an Assistant Professor of Folklore at Indiana University's Folklore Institute. He has just completed Folktales of Egypt one of the volumes of The Folktales of the World Series.

John Helak is a New York City musician with an interest in bluegrass music.

Ronald J. Meyer is a graduate student in the Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures at Indiana University.

John H. McDowell is an Assistant Professor at the Folklore Institute at Indiana University and is interested in children's folklore.

Charles L. Perdue Jr. teaches folklore at the University of Virginia at Charlottesville. He has had a long standing interest in material culture and recently co-authored Weevils in the Wheat: Interviews with Virginia Ex-Slave Narratives.

Mark Workman is a doctoral candidate at the University of Pennsylvania and is interested in performance theory and folkloristics.

Gary Stanton is a graduate student in folklore at Indiana University. He is currently studying vernacular architecture in the Kinki region of Japan. His primary interest is American folklife.

Egle Zygas is the Translation Editor of the Folklore Forum and is interested in Slavic folklore and languages.